

Are You Undocumented and Have a Spouse, Parent or Child in the Military or Veteran?

You may qualify to request a work permit based on a military parole in place program. This permit can be renewed indefinitely, as long as USCIS allows it. Certain criminal charges, alien smuggling, among others may affect an applicant's eligibility for requesting Parole in Place.

Pathway to Legal Permanent Residency for Parole in Place holders.

If you have a spouse, or child over 21 years old, you may qualify to request your residency status. There are multiple instances where someone's eligibility for this benefit can be affected. It is very important to contact an experienced attorney to properly evaluate your case and ensure that you will have a positive outcome.

Are you a DACA holder and would like to visit a family member in your home country?

DACA recipients are currently allowed to request a travel permit to visit their family members abroad. These may be based on humanitarian reasons, for example visiting a sick or elderly relative, attending funeral services for a family member abroad, helping in the care of a family member undergoing a medical procedure, educational or business reasons, among others. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) usually welcome those with Advance Parole at a port of entry. Though it is up to the CBP Officer to allow re-entry to the country, our office has had a successful outcome when processing these requests since they were initially accepted in 2012.

After returning home from your trip with Advance Parole you may be able to request your LPR status if married to a U.S. citizen under INA § 245(a). This application will allow the applicant to adjust their status without having an interview abroad. They are also currently being handled under less processing time than other marriage based petitions.

Victim of Crime and Need Protection? Let Us Help.

If you have ever been a victim of a crime in the USA or if an immediate family member has ever been a victim of crime in the USA, you may qualify for a U visa. Only certain crimes against you or your immediate family member will qualify you or your family member for this visa. Some examples are domestic violence, sexual abuse, felony assault, kidnapping, unlawful restraint, human trafficking and others.

Generally, the acting police department, agency, district attorney or judge, must certify that you were a victim of a qualifying crime and that you were helpful to that agency. Note it is not required that these agencies sign your U certification, but it must be signed in order to apply for a U visa.

With a U visa, you will get a work permit valid for four years in U visa status. After 3 years, you may apply for legal permanent residency. Once we file for the U visa with USCIS, it usually takes 13 months to get an approval or denial. Your immediate family members may also be eligible to apply with you.
